Jessica Oliff Daly is an Associate at the firm's Philadelphia office, where she focuses on employment-based immigration. She supports the firm's high-volume immigration clients, guiding employers and their employees through nonimmigrant and immigrant filings, as well as immigration program management. She brings more than 17 years of legal experience spanning immigration law, complex commercial litigation, and pro bono advocacy.

Before joining Klasko, Jessica spent nearly six years at HIAS Pennsylvania, a nonprofit organization providing legal services to low-income immigrants and refugees. As its first Pro Bono Program Manager, she built and managed a program that engaged more than 800 attorneys to provide legal representation more than 1000 clients. She trained, mentored, and advised attorneys on a wide range of immigration matters, including applications for asylum, temporary protected status, special immigrant juvenile status, and adjustment of status. Her work involved drafting training materials, reviewing briefs and filings, and helping attorneys navigate complex and evolving immigration laws and regulations.

Jessica also has ten years of experience in the litigation department of a global law firm in New York, where her practice focused on complex commercial litigation and financial restructuring matters. She represented clients in federal and state courts and developed extensive experience in legal analysis, advocacy, and litigation strategy. She devoted hundreds of hours to pro bono immigration matters, which sparked her interest in immigration law.
