Timothy (Tim) C. D'Arduini is the Partner-in-Charge of the firm's Washington, DC office and a member of the global immigration and mobility, corporate immigration, and worksite compliance teams.

Tim is known for his holistic, collaborative, and proactive approach to managing his clients' immigration programs and sponsored populations in the United States and across the globe. He thinks critically about his clients' business goals and devises and tailors immigration strategies that amplify their talent and compliance goals.

Tim primarily serves multinational corporations and Fortune 500 companies in financial services, technology, consumer products, manufacturing, health care, insurance, and defense industries. In order to advance their talent attraction, productivity, and retention goals, he advises these clients on policies, procedures, and operating models for sponsoring their foreign national staff members for visas, work authorizations, paths to permanent residence, naturalization, and citizenship. He also has experience advising clients on the immigration-related impact of mergers and acquisitions for companies across multiple sectors and multiple continents.

Tim also provides premier services for right-to-work (I-9 and similar regulatory schemes across the world), suspect identity and work authorization documents, immigration-related fraud, and wage compliance programs by auditing existing programs or initiating new compliance practices and protocols. He also has successfully defended and advised clients through immigration enforcement investigations, including raids of company facilities to determine the validity of work authorization of its employee corps, and discriminated-related investigations initiated by the Department of Justice's Immigrant and Employee Rights division.

Clients value Tim's integrated approach to immigration as he goes beyond ad hoc and temporary solutions, exploring creative, yet practical, solutions that are enduring. He has also spent decades developing a network of bipartisan policy and decision-makers, which has been an invaluable asset to devising multi-faceted strategies that advance the interests of his clients. Tim also has the unique experience of advising civic organizations on the development of immigration programs to attract foreign nationals for local employers and the revitalization of local communities.

Beyond his immigration work, Tim highly values a diverse and equitable workplace. He puts into practice his belief that those with varying backgrounds make work products stronger, and a diverse is the strongest champion of exceeding clients' expectations. It inspires him to understand their stories and help them achieve their dreams—it's that ethos and care that he endeavors to infuse into every aspect of his practice and interaction with those requiring immigration support.

Conducted immigration fraud and I-9 employment eligibility verification investigations (e.g., a multi-year, multimillion-dollar DOJ investigation of a company that was subject to a major immigration raid, and the rebuilding and monitoring of a food manufacturing company's immigration compliance program).

Oversaw internal audit of I-9 employment eligibility verification documents in advance of response to a government subpoena, mitigating the manufacturer's risk of penalties.

Devised best practices for project management, training, tracking, reporting, and quality assurance for in-office and remote environments, and established a sustained model for continued agile and efficient delivery of work.
